Children Living in a Foreign Country

Studies have shown that living abroad gives children the opportunity to learn how to adapt, and it also helps to create solid foundations for their future. Here are some of the key benefits:

Integration: Integrating in a new culture and society gives children a great advantage in many situations. Learning to communicate with different people and to adjust to different environments will increase children's communication skills, knowledge, adaptability and self-confidence. Children will also develop a sense of the world around them and will appreciate the differences in life in other countries.

Languages: Living abroad will also give a child a chance to learn foreign languages. Some children attend classes in local schools and some learn the language just by playing with their neighbours or by watching local TV and listening to local music. Children will probably become bilingual or even multilingual.

Personality development: Relocating abroad will stimulate the development of skills necessary to adapt to new environments and accept new cultures. By learning how to accept various changes and live with them, a child will learn to overcome obstacles, a skill we all need in our lives.

Facing life changes: Children living abroad will learn that new things are probably good and exciting, and that a challenge is not something that should be avoided. They often develop positive attitudes to unexpected changes in life.

If things are well planned, moving abroad will become the opportunity of a lifetime for children.
